Colorado State's Opera Theatre will present four performances of The Magic Flute, an opera by Wolfgang Amadeus Mozart which has enchanted young and old alike for over two centuries. The production is the CSU Opera Theatre directorial debut of CSU Opera Director and former Metropolitan Opera baritone, David Malis, and is conducted by CSU maestro, Wes Kenney.

About Todd Resseguie – playing the part of Papageno

Could you give us a little background information into your life, especially when and how you decided to become a performer?

I grew up with music in my life – my mother and sister were both music majors here at CSU. While I have been involved in choir and band all through school, I only ever felt at home when I was on the stage. Colorado State Opera Theater has provided me with the opportunity to continue with my desire to act as well as developing my singing.

What is your favorite part about being in “The Magic Flute?”

I absolutely love being able to work with David Malis, who has performed the role of Papageno professionally for years. His experience has helped me to really understand the character and what makes Papageno so special to audience members.

What do you think the audience will most enjoy about “The Magic Flute”?

Other than the comedic aspect that Papageno brings to the show, I think the audience will enjoy the talent showcased by the students. Not only the actors, but all of the crew involved have brought amazing things to this production.
